

MUL▽IUM

We are an architecture firm – not of buildings, but of modular networks that are designed to inspire cultural participation and harmony between the physical and digital worlds.

Mul – vium

Coined by Mulvium founder Benjamin T. Rossen, Mulvium combines the prefix “multi-” and the preposition “via,” derived from Latin etymology to denote “multiple roads.” The word mirrors the morphology of the “quadrivium,” a four-part liberal arts education employed to understand the world and the cosmos. The quadrivium was often referred to as the four-fold path. Medieval scholars studied numbers in their many forms: pure (arithmetic), immobile magnitudes (geometry), ratios (music), and magnitudes in motion (astronomy). Each discipline was associated with a mythological muse that inspired men to think critically and breed creativity. Akin to the quadrivium, Mulvium cultivates a nexus of disciplines to promote accessibility, intellectual integrity, and collaboration. We address modern human behavior and will empower mankind in the face of modernity – particularly in the face of ubiquitous artificial general intelligence and the technological singularity.
